He is seated on the right hand of the Majesty on high, but no height can hide His lowly disciples; no lofty communion can shut them from His thought. Write unto the churches, I know, I know--my heart, my counsel, my help, my all is theirs. / know where thou dwellest. Now what say you to this? It is very sweet to know that the Master knows where we live. It is good to know that He has our address. Sweeter still is it, a great deal, that He comes to see us. And yet, what think you?--that the Lord should know us at home. On Sundays and at the service it is another thing; when we have brought out our best thoughts, and best desires, and most devout manners; when the din of business is hushed, if not forgotten. But that He should know us at home, what say we to that? I have asked myself sometimes, Soul, wouldst thou rather that thy Lord should know thee at thy best or at thy worst? and I have hesitated for the answer. My Lord, I have said, I am glad for Thee to know me at my best, glad that Thou dost know my sorrow for my sin and that I do believe in Thee and that my heart goes out in hungry longings after Thee. Right glad, my Lord, that Thou dost suffer me to look into...
